About EGDA

The Estonian Game Developers Association (EGDA) is a non-profit organisation representing and supporting Estonia's video game industry.

Our mission is to strengthen the growth of game development in Estonia by connecting studios, developers, educators, researchers, cultural institutions and public sector partners. Games sit at the intersection of technology, creativity, storytelling, art and innovation, making them one of the most dynamic creative mediums of our time.

EGDA works to increase the visibility of the Estonian games industry, support talent development, foster collaboration between industry and education and create opportunities for international partnerships. We also advocate for games as an important part of contemporary digital culture and Estonia's creative economy.

By bringing together professionals, students, educators and industry stakeholders, we aim to help build a sustainable, internationally recognised game development ecosystem in Estonia.

Whether you're a game developer, student, educator, studio, researcher, policymaker or simply passionate about games, EGDA is here to help connect people, ideas, and opportunities.
